As a life long resident, hard working, tax paying retiree who never missed voting in any election West Virginian, I am adamantly opposed to having windmill farms located anywhere in the State of West Virginia.

In my opinion, the State of West Virginia has given almost all of its natural assets, i.e. timber and coal, to the so-called greater good at the expense of our land and people and it now the time to stop before we lose our last natural asset—the beauty and peace of our mountains.

If these windmill farms are such an asset, why don't (they, whomever they are) build them in the White Mountains of New England, Pocono Mountains of New York and Pennsylvania, in the ocean off of Cape Cod, in the waters of the Great Lakes and atop of the buildings in New York City. In these locations, the transmission lines would be much closer to the customers they serve.

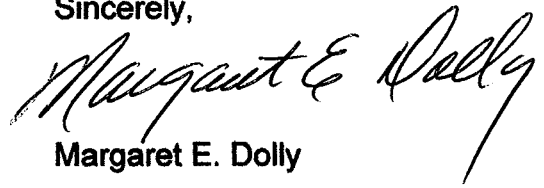

In my opinion, windmill farms in West Virginia are an abomination upon the landscape destroying our last great asset the natural beauty of the hills, mountains and valley. They are a detriment to flying creatures and create a terrible hummmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmm.

The above disadvantages surely overrides the creation of a few piddling jobs and a miniscule amount of property tax.

I cannot understand how any government official or agency would believe these windmill farms would be an asset to the State of West Virginia.

Thank you for reading my letter and sincerely hope you will think long and hard before supporting anymore of these windmill farms in the beautiful State of West Virginia.

Sincerely,

Margaret E. Dolly
